German Ambassador Will Sail on Imperator, October 23, for America

After Remaining in New York for a Short Time He Will Come to Washington.

COUNT VON BEENSTORFF, Ambassador of Germany, and Countess von Bernstorff will sail from Cherbourg, France, on board the Imperator on October 23, and will probably remain in New York a short time before coming to the embassy in Washington.

Commander Vincent Benoist d'Azy, French naval attaché, has returned to this country after a leave of absence spent abroad, and is stopping in New York, preparatory to coming to Washington.

Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh has returned to Washington from Bar Harbor, where she spent the summer, and is at the Lathrop House, in Connecticut avenue, which she recently leased for the season.

Brig. Gen. Henry G. Sharpe, U. S. A., and Mrs. Sharpe will remain in Washington for the winter, the order transferring General Sharpe having been revoked. Mrs. Willett and her daughter, Miss Willett, will arrive in Washington on Wednesday morning from their home in South Carolina, and will be guests of General and Mrs. Sharpe for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Luttrell, the latter formerly Miss Lathrop, who spent the summer at Falls Church, Va., have taken an apartment in the Connecticut for the season and will move into it about November 1.

Mrs. Charles W. Richardson, State regent of the National Society, D. A. R., has invited the different chapters of the society to meet each other at her home, 1317 Connecticut avenue, the evenings of October from the 20th to the 25th, when plans for the winter's work and events of special interest to the District will be discussed.

Mrs. Richardson is anxious to meet all of the daughters, and asks that those not receiving invitations will please notify Mrs. Vida K. Clementson, 1608 Seventeenth street.

The dance recital which Miss Jessie Herriott will give in the ballroom of New Willard tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 o'clock will attract an interesting audience. Miss Herriott will be assisted by Mrs. E. Clyde Shado, soprano; Miss Margaret O'Toole, harpist; Louis Thompson, tenor; Bruce Cleveland, and Mrs. Mary Branson Keyes, pianist.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. John H. Bankhead, Mrs. Champ Clark, Mrs. William Allen Cullup, Mrs. Charles D. Carter, Mrs. George M. Sternberg, Mrs. R. M. A. Schofield, Mrs. Urban T. Hemmick, Mrs. Norman Underwood, Mrs. John Paul Jones, Mrs. Arthur Graves Lund, Mrs. Charles Alden, Mrs. Rutherford, and Miss Janet Richards.

Plans for a dance at the Raleigh Hotel on Halloween have been perfected by the Alumni Association of the Business High School.

Miss Ethel Shane, with a committee of forty members, has arranged for an elaborate occasion. The ballroom will be decorated with the season's emblems, will be furnished the dancers. Refreshments will be served by the Raleigh caterer. A portion of the Marine Band is to furnish the music, and a special floor committee, under charge of Vincent Miller, will look after the affairs at the hall.

The chaperons will be Mrs. Ella Shane, Mrs. Ella Gates, and Miss Graham. Two hundred and fifty invitations have been mailed, in addition to 500 placed in the hands of the committee to be distributed. No effort is being spared to make the occasion a successful reunion of the graduates of the High School.

Miss Frances Hawthorne Brady, of California street, is spending the fall in Asheville, N. C., the guest of relatives.

Miss Fannie S. Stealey is visiting her sister, Mrs. Anna E. Hursey, in Asheville, N. C.

A special meeting of the trustees of the Southern Industrial Educational Association was held in the headquarters, Southern building, Saturday evening to discuss important matters before the departure of Mrs. Glew, who leaves on the 15th for the national conservation course in Knoxville. Mrs. Glew will represent the association and speak on Mountain Day, October 20.

MRS. ROBERT H. GITTINS.

Congressman and Mrs. Robert H. Gittins, of New York, who spent the last few days in New York city, are now at their home at Niagara Falls.

Mrs. B. A. Helm, who spent the past summer in Germany and Austria, has returned to her home in the Rochambeau, coming direct from Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Camp, the latter who was Miss Nettie L. Campbell, have taken an apartment at the Stockbridge for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Scott Smith have closed their cottage at Rye North Beach, N. H., and have returned to their Washington home at 222 T street. They have with them for the winter their daughter, Mrs. Kipp, and their little granddaughter, Miss Annie Whitney Kipp.

Among the many out-of-town visitors to the headquarters of the Southern Industrial Educational Association, 221 Southern building, this week to see the beautiful exhibit of weavings, baskets, feather fans, tied lace handbags, etc., were Mrs. Mary Kover, of Los Angeles, Cal., and her son, a prominent lawyer of that city; Mrs. L. H. Whipple, also of Los Angeles, called and proudly took home with her two very handsome hand-woven covers of the charcoal-wheel pattern, duplicate of the White House draperies, in blue and white.

Miss Leah Stansell will leave Washington this week for Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Fort Worth, Tex., where she will spend the winter with her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stansell, of Fort Worth.

The Congressional Club will be formally opened on Friday with a tea, and from that time on, will be accessible to the wives of the Senators and Congressmen who are members. There will be a formal or official opening of the club December 1, when the Congressional circle is more nearly complete.

Brig. Gen. William C. Crozier, U. S. A., and Mrs. Benjamin H. Warden, were among the Washington people sailing from New York on board the Imperator on Saturday.

For The Times' Children Just Before It's Bedtime

THE GOLDEN LEAVES.

ONCE upon a time a King who had become very poor called his three children to him and told them he was old and poor, and that all he had in the world were two pieces of gold and a cow.

Two of his children were boys—Gabo and Jennar—and the other, the youngest, was a daughter named Lella.

Gabo and Jennar did not want the cow because they wished to be off to the city and make their fortunes, as they thought they could do, in a very short time, so without giving any thought to their poor old father or their sister they took the pieces of gold and started off for the big city, miles and miles away.

When they had gone the old King told Lella to take her cow and follow after her brothers. "I am old and shall not live long," he told her. "You may be able to sell the cow and buy wool to weave a beautiful cloth, which you can sell to the King in the next kingdom for a large sum of money."

But Lella told her father that she would not leave him; she would try to sell the cow and then come back to care for him.

The next morning she was up early and, leading the cow by a rope, she started off to find a purchaser.

She had not gone far when she met an old woman, who begged her for a drink of milk, so Lella filled the cup which the old woman handed her, and in return she received a queer-looking seed.

"Plant this where you can watch it," said the old woman, "and you will be well paid for the milk you have given me."

A little way beyond Lella met a woman with a child in her arms. "Give me a little milk for my baby," she said, "and I will give you a wonderful powder to sprinkle on your garden which will make it grow in a wonderful manner."

Lella gave her the milk and went on, but she had not gone far when she met an old man with a pack on his shoulders.

"Give me a drink of milk and I will give you wool that will weave a cloth of wonderful pattern," Lella gave him the milk and took the wool, and then finding it was too late to go on, she turned back.

At Newport for her dancing and prowess in all sports, is reported to be ill.

Senator Colt has gone to Newport for a short visit, and was last night the guest of honor at a dinner given by Senator and Mrs. R. Livingston Beckman.

reach the city, she turned around and went home.

The old king was sitting in the doorway of the old castle and asked why she had returned.

"If all that I have been told is true," she said, "I have earned enough to make us comfortable for a while at least."

The next morning she planted the seed near the door of the castle where she could watch it, and the powder she scattered over the garden, which had ceased to grow.

The next morning the garden looked green, and by night the vegetables had grown large enough to be gathered. The seed by the door grew to a bush by the next morning, and when Lella went to water it she saw a little gold rim around each leaf.

Every day she watched and cared for the bush with the wonderful leaves, and one morning when she stepped out of the door the bush was covered with leaves which looked like gold.

She called her father and they broke off some of the leaves and found they were gold.

"We will take them to the city and sell them," she told the old King, "and perhaps we can build up your castle and kingdom again."

With some of the money they requested they bought clothes and food, and the rest they took home and hid in the ground under the castle.

"Now I can weave the cloth from the wool I received from the old man," Lella told her father, "and take it to the next kingdom and sell it to the King, for my clothes will not look like a beggar's."

So she wove the cloth and the pattern was of wonderful flowers in colors such as never before had been seen. Then Lella took it to the King, who was so pleased that he asked for the one who wove it to be brought before him.

When Lella told him she was a poor princess the King told her she should become a Queen by becoming his wife. Lella married the King and rode back to her father's castle in a beautiful coach, drawn by four black horses, with the King beside her.

Her father was overjoyed at her good fortune, but told her he would stay at the old castle, for as the golden leaves of the wonderful bush were thick he would have money aplenty.

Just as the King and Queen were driving away two men, who looked like beggars came to the door, and when the Queen looked at them she saw they were her brothers, who had taken the gold pieces and gone to make their fortunes.

Far from making their fortunes, they had spent the gold and were almost starved and had come back to their father for shelter.

When they saw that good fortune had come to their sister they felt ashamed and fell on their knees before her and asked her to forgive them for being so selfish.

But Lella told them to ask forgiveness of their old father, whom they were willing to leave to starve while they took all the money he had and went away.

Of course the old King forgave them and Lella told Gabo and Jennar they could live with their father if they were really sorry for what they had done and would always be kind to the old King.

The castle was repaired and the grounds made as beautiful as they were before the old King became poor with what they received for the golden leaves, and the King lived to a good old age with Gabo and Jennar, who never again left him.

But Lella and the King married again to visit them and look after the bush with the golden leaves.

Pavlova's Art Has Enriched World Greatly, Is Opinion of Julia Murdock

Painting and Statuary Have Been Made to Perpetuate Her Memory for Ages.

RUSSIA is sending us again its foremost dancer, Anna Pavlova, who is to come to Washington with her company of 100, and scenic splendors worthy of the wonders of her art in the near future.

This charming little Russian dancer's art has enriched the world, and has been immortalized in painting and statuary. Artists have transferred to canvas her every pose and expression, so that generations to come may see the perfection of grace that seems to be hers alone.

Seraphim, the Russian sculptor, has modeled Pavlova for statues which have been made in the royal porcelain works of her native country, the output of this factory being restricted to uses of not less than a family, and for gifts to their personal friends. The statues are never sold, and are not obtainable by the public.

In all Europe there has scarcely been an art exhibition of consequence for years at which has not been shown a statue or painting of Pavlova. John Lavery has made a portrait of Pavlova as "The Swan," which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in the Paris Salon, and which was responsible for his obtaining a commission to paint the state portrait of the royal family of England.

The Czar Nicholas of Russia is not the only ruler who believes that Pavlova is not to be matched in grace and beauty, however. Painters, sculptors, kings, presidents, and rulers the world over have recognized her wonderful art by showering attentions and honors upon the dainty little dancer.

FOR TIMES WOMEN WHO WANT TO KNOW

What Is Seen in The Shops

Combined with both chiffon and velvet, jet is an attractive and necessary adjunct. Heavy enough to hold down both materials, it is a weight in itself, and precludes the use of the heavy leads, which so badly pull and tear.

Small jet beads and small designs in general are not alone employed for decorative purposes. Some of the gowns in the larger New York establishments show a decided tendency toward the use of the larger jet pieces. Circular discs in a string, the size of a penny, adorn the neck of one gown.

Lovers of beads and neck chains of the equally artistic but less expensive stones, imitation ambers, ivory, ebony, etc., will have their fad to the limit. When the neck is cut low in V shape, a string of beads graduated in size, and matching the color scheme of the costume, are worn. They are just the length of the V, and gleam out charmingly from the bare neck and net ruffing.

Far from making their fortunes, they had spent the gold and were almost starved and had come back to their father for shelter.

When they saw that good fortune had come to their sister they felt ashamed and fell on their knees before her and asked her to forgive them for being so selfish.

But Lella told them to ask forgiveness of their old father, whom they were willing to leave to starve while they took all the money he had and went away.

Of course the old King forgave them and Lella told Gabo and Jennar they could live with their father if they were really sorry for what they had done and would always be kind to the old King.

Kings, Presidents, and Rulers of Many Lands Have Given Compliments to Her.

after the compliment above mentioned, added: "England ought to be proud of such a delightful exposition of the art of dancing."

When Pavlova appears here in Washington it will be with one of the largest companies that has ever appeared outside the imperial Russian opera houses at St. Petersburg and Moscow.

Three famous men dancers accompany her—M. Novikov, premier danseur classique of the imperial opera house at Moscow; M. Zailich, premier danseur de caractère at the same place, and M. Cecchetti, premier mime of the imperial opera house at Moscow.

The last named dancer is an Italian, Russianized. What the Czar thinks of him is shown by the fact that Cecchetti is head master of the Imperial Mariinsky Institute of the Dance, at St. Petersburg, where boys and girls are trained for the ballet.

Miss Stephina Plaskowicz, premiere danseuse de caractère, will be another star with Pavlova. Other leading danseuses will be Misses Bussowa, Ligierova, Milanova, Cromnova, Nevelskaia, Gorskova, Fredova, Korkova, Zaimonova, Sakava, Lindowska, and Hertska. Leading men dancers are MM. Nitkin, Romanowski, Morkowski, Sopha, Monahoff, and Kobeleff. Besides these there will be a big corps de ballet from the imperial opera houses of St. Petersburg and Moscow.

The soft green hat with the stern bow in the most classy of Alpine shades and styles is not reserved for the male contingent alone. Velour and velvet hats in this style are now made by the tailored hat establishments, for women.

The sizes run very large, so that, like the man's hat, these models can sit well down on the head over the ears. They are not worn by young girls alone, for, with the added touch of a feather or pom-pom, they are suitable for the business hat of the woman in office. These hats may be had at the shop in G street which deals largely in feathers and plumes, and which is not far from the corner of Ninth.

At the department store which is in Seventh street, between D and E, there are to be had, trimmed hats for $5. It was stated in these columns some time previously that the average price would be $7.50, but the millinery department of this store seems to have found a way

There is no haggling over prices here; we do not mark them by a secret code and then tell you the price according to what we think you will be willing to pay.

We know that our prices are as low as you can find for goods of equal value, and we prove it by putting them right where you can see just what they are—an invitation that you make the cost careful comparison with the best prices of any other house in the city.

Can you think of any more convincing evidence to prove the truth of our claim?
